

Professions and Their Relation To Marriage

A Man's Business Certainly Influences His Character, and It Is Well for a Wife-to-Be to Consider That.

By DOROTHY DIX.

A YOUNG woman who appears to be more blessed in the matter of suitors than is customary in this beautiful age writes me that three men are suing for her hand and heart. One of these suitors is a lawyer, another a doctor and a third is a preacher, and she desires to know which one of these professions turns out the best variety of husband.

If I were choosing a husband I should pick out the man and not his occupation. Still, as a matter of fact, a woman is concerned in her husband's business, and, so, perhaps it is just as well for her to take into consideration in selecting her life mate. Certainly a man's profession influences his character to a degree. It largely determines the conditions under which his wife must live, and it is as well for her to consider beforehand whether these would be to her liking or not.

Soulful Woman Should Choose Soulful Man.
A soulful woman, for instance, might find a never-ending discussion in the family circle of salt and fish, and great groceries getting upon her nerves, no matter how worthy was the husband whose interest was bound up in the provision trade. On the other hand, a woman whose mental range never reached beyond her own kitchen and nursery would be likely to find the society of a learned college professor somewhat heavy. Also the woman who is keen for money and the good things that money buys obviously makes a mistake in marrying a man who follows the fine arts and whose reward is mainly plain living and high thinking.

There are just as many good husbands in one profession as in another. Lawyers make excellent husbands, and openly receive the adoration of the women of the congregation in a way that must be maddening to a wife inclined to be green-eyed.

Moreover, the preacher is in this perpetual danger zone—he has to converse with the sisters of his flock about their immortal souls, and women know, if men do not, that women have no souls. They have only hearts, and when they converse most fluently about their yearnings for heaven they are thinking most about flirtations on earth.

No woman outside of the theatrical profession should marry an actor, because no other woman is quick enough to follow him in his moods and his love so as not to make a mess of tragedy of matrimony. The life of the actor concentrates his attention on the emotions and makes them the center of the universe. Therefore, he is always taking the temperature of his affections, and the minute they've gone down from the boiling point to normal he becomes alarmed and nervous and starts out on a still hunt for something in the way of a tonic.

Actresses, being also temperamental, feel the same at times, and understand this condition of affairs perfectly. Therefore, there are seldom any hard feelings or hurt hearts in a theatrical divorce.

Ordinary women, not in the profession, cannot reach these emotional heights, and so they are wise if they confine their adorations for matrimony to the front of the house, instead of behind the footlights.
Business Men Best Husbands.
Generally speaking, the safest choice for a husband is just the ordinary, everyday business man. He doesn't expect too much of a wife, because he's used to employing people and knows the measure of human imperfections. He also knows that nothing ever comes up to your hopes of it, and so he sets down the disappointments of matrimony to the general profit and loss account of life and lets it go at that.

He is not accustomed to flattery like the doctor and the lawyer and the actor, and so he is willing to admire his wife instead of expecting her to throw bouquets at him. He is content to stay at home at night, and is easily tamed and domesticated, and for these and other reasons he makes the preferred risk in matrimony.

you are all vivid browns and reds. Bring out your points. It will take brains to find the best way to do this. But however, you are it. It is worth your while to be beautiful, too. For real beauty is made up of all the best things in the world. They are yours for the taking.

To be beautiful is to be kind and sweet and loving, to be healthy and wholesome and sane and clean, to be strong and wise and patient. With beauty like this, dear, your husband will love you always. This beauty is yours for the taking. Will you help yourself to a full portion of it?

PRIZE FOOD

Palatable, Economical, Nourishing. A Nebraska woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and the result is a most economical experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this cereal almost continually for seven years. 'We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all. 'When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts, I was almost a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life. 'After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day. 'They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe stages of whooping cough, they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed. 'Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us.'"

Beatrice Fairfax Writes on

How To Be Beautiful

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"I WANT to be beautiful! Oh, I want to be beautiful!" writes Inez. "I want the man I care for to love me always. Can you tell me how to make myself so beautiful that he will always care, or is this too hard?"

My dear girl—this is easy for me. I can tell you just how to be beautiful. But you will have to work hard to attain true beauty. External vigilance is the price of beauty. Laziness, gluttony, temper, stubbornness, and all the dear indulgences of feminine nature must be sacrificed once and for all if you want to be a beauty.

Are you willing to work unceasingly? Are you willing to be forever climbing a long, steep hill? Are you energetic, ambitious and determined? Well, then you may set confidently about being a beauty.

You must cultivate beauty in three departments. You must have a clean, wholesome, well developed body first of all.

To do this sacrifice sweets, sauces, gravies, condiments, hot breads and all your pet indigestibles. Drink water, a very little sugarless, creamless tea or coffee and lemonade. Avoid liquor and all indulgences in overeating or overdrinking.

Get very high of fresh air you can manage to take every form of brisk exercise you can afford.

Now, with your body house in order, set anxiously about cultivating a beautiful face. To this end, you are it. It is worth your while to be beautiful, too. For real beauty is made up of all the best things in the world. They are yours for the taking.

To be beautiful is to be kind and sweet and loving, to be healthy and wholesome and sane and clean, to be strong and wise and patient. With beauty like this, dear, your husband will love you always. This beauty is yours for the taking. Will you help yourself to a full portion of it?

Now, you must dress in good taste. Study your color scheme. Bring out all its good points and tone down the glaring things you don't like. Just cultivate your artistic eye so you'll know instinctively that you mustn't set an orange hat atop your mouse brown hair and pretty complexion or wear an anemic gray dress if

LITTLE BOBBIE'S PA

BY WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THIS of us club ladies has a new idea, and Ma to Pa last night.

How wonderful, said Pa, just to think that you dear old gals talk the time out in a while to get a new idea. It is truly refreshing, said Pa, it seems like a leaf out of a story book. Well, said Pa, spill the idea, spill it.

I wish you wouldn't use that sporting page slang in front of little Bobbie so much, said Ma. Well, I will tell you what the idea is, & all of us girls expect our husbands to help us carry it out. We have made up our minds that we are all going to go anywhere on the city streets at night without a escort. Our husbands happen to be at these lodges or clubs.

Well, said Pa, is that the idea? That is the idea, said Ma. I am sure it is a sensible idea. Think of the thousands of women that stay in the home miles, said Ma, when their husbands are too busy to take them anywhere. They stay in these homes because of the old, foolish notion that a respectable woman wouldn't go out alone at night. What do you think of the idea?

Well, said Pa, I don't know. There are so many of the old notions and fashions getting the better of these days, that I am never a bit surprised when I hear of some new fad. But I must say, said Pa, that this idea is a little more sane than some of the latest fads. I can't seem to think of any good reason why a good woman can't go on an errand or go calling on a neighbor without a escort. If she wants to take the chance, I shall make no objection to the new scheme, said Pa, & shall talk to my gentleman friends about it, too.

I told all the ladies at the club how good & sensible you are in things like that, said Ma. You are, dear. Now I can talk little Bobbie with me if I want to go to visit a neighbor, or if it is after his bed time, I can leave him with the maid & go for a stroll. I thank you, my dear husband, for the grand stand which you have taken on this grave question. I must go & tell the other girls about it, said Ma.

Yes, said Pa, tell them I am for it, & if you want to, you can tell them the reason I am for it. You see, wife, said Pa, it has been in the past that when I went to lodge I always felt a little guilty about hanging around after lodge with the boys, because I knew that you would be at home alone, waiting for me. The way you girls are going to swing it now, said Pa, we men needn't worry about what time we get home after the lodge. We shall be happy in the knowledge that our wives are out roaming around & drinking in the beauties of the night, & while they are drinking in the beauties of the night we can stink around that much longer drinking in a little more of the same. It is a grate idea, a grate idea, said Pa.

Then Ma looked at Pa kind of funny & began to think.
